European Financial Markets Integration, Institutional Convergences and Public Debt Policies

The increasing speed of socioeconomic transformations continuously urges an updating and calibration of economic models and empirical analyses in order to explain new economic facts.

In this perspective the effects of the tsunami of excess liquidity around the world and the dramatic growth of new emerging economies is creating new giant players (private equity and sovereign funds) in financial markets who are significantly changing the scenario. The fragility of emerging countries which had to defend themselves from currency crises by accumulating reserves has rapidly turned into a strength and led to the creation of new influential financial funds.

At the same time the pace of technological innovation in econometric and theoretical modelling creates the possibility of looking at traditional and long debated issues from a new perspective which catches original elements which were previously unexplored.

The contributions presented in our conference react to both of the two sources of changes by “pouring new wine in new bottles” with a focus on the most recent economic changes analysed with the frontier methodologies in some old and new crucial fields of monetary and financial economics: i) Financial market integration in EU; ii) Regulatory framework in EU and developments in financial services and markets since the ISD; iii) Alternative Markets for Finance; iv) Institutional Investment Funds and financial market stabilisation in Italy and Europe; v) Monetary policy, rates of interest and public debt management; vi) Private Equity, Venture capital and innovation in EU and US; vi) &A, regulation and competition in Banking sector; vii) Microfinance and economic development; viii) Money and happiness; ix) Asian Stock Exchanges: new bubbles?

Within this broad framework of topics the Conference focuses on some crucial questions such as the recent evolution of monetary policies of the banking system and of financial market rules (MIFID) and behaviour in globally integrated market economies.

To sketch one of them and describe the actual configuration of the banking industry we may think of a forest with a complex and rich ecosystem. Together with large secular trees (the big players) a large variety of different vegetation exist covering niches abandoned by the former. Variety is not only in the type of activities but also in the governance form. By focusing on the same time on large banks, corporate social responsibility in finance and microfinance the Conference aims to provide evidence of this variety exploring challenges and issues related to different corporate entities, mode of action and targets.

The other sections of the conference will focus on the remaining aspects of financial markets: the description of the playing field (with theoretical and empirical analyses on asset pricing) and of its rules and the analysis of the behaviour of institutional players including policymakers such as debt management agencies and Central Banks.
